The number one place to start learning Photoshop is with a _book_ or another reference for your needs. You can also use the following _tutorials_ on the Web. Start with these because they are the most updated. The Live Paint option becomes a great asset to students of any age. And if you're a student of any age, just take one of these tutorials for a test drive and see how well you do without a class and a textbook. ## Keyboard Shortcuts Photoshop has a complete keyboard layout that features about 350 function keys. The forward slash character (/) allows you to quickly change the active layer. Try using the PageUp and PageDown keys to go through layers. You can use any of the other functions to create new documents, crop images, duplicate or delete a layer, and other actions that save you much time. ## Using Gradients You can use the basic gradient tool in Photoshop Elements to create gradients from pure solid colors or from a solid color to a pure gradient. Gradients allow you to control colors from a single source. For example, you can use the Gradient tool and the Gradient Palette to apply a gradient from green to red. The resulting image, shown in Figure 4-5, has a slight green-to-red gradient. FIGURE 4-5: The Gradient palette lets you quickly create gradients in Photoshop Elements. Many of the tools in Photoshop Elements include a Gradient option. For example, the Spot Healing Brush (see the next section) has a Gradient option that enables you to create a gradient. To get a gradient going, follow these steps: 1. Click the Gradient tool and then click in an area of your image that has a different color from the adjacent area. 2. Choose the Gradient option when you see the cursor change into a stopwatch shape (the little arrow at the bottom of the tool). 3. Drag the cursor over the area you want to change color from the adjacent area. At this point, the entire area you selected turns the same color as the surrounding area. 4. Click the OK button when you're done. You can also hold down the Shift key while you drag to create a smooth gradient. If you need more gradient-like control, try a Blend or a Gradient overlay (see the next section). ## Adjusting Levels

I know its been a long time since I've blogged, and I apologize for that. It's been a crazy summer, what with my trip to Sundance, photo contest entry, and general New York craziness. ? Summertime means swimsuits, sun, barbecues, and time to be creative. So, I've been working on my "Summer of Creative" website. I love it, and it's finally live! You can grab the code here: I'm still on a tight budget, so I've included freebies of some of my favorite characters. This is the kind of content I would enjoy creating if I had more time. Sorry for the eye boogers, but I'm tired from the chlorine. I've also included a post about my Sundance experience, including sharing my shorts with you all. So…I want to walk to, and bike to the park, or beach, or building in a bikini. I want to be able to do the things I used to do, with my family, when I was a little kid. With these swimsuits, I can have a good time doing what I want to do, on my terms, and also save a ton of money. (Well, a few dollars, anyway.) Do you ever fantasize about fitting into a bikini? I do. Now, I'll get to make my dreams come true, and do all those fun things that I used to do with my family. Bonus: There are plenty of fun things I can do with my family, like swimming, the city, the zoo. If you're from New York, check out the zoo for a fun weekend. We went last summer. PS. The code above will allow you to see the contents of my website right on your own blog. You don't need to use the code, but I wanted to be transparent with you guys. Also, I figured I should share a couple of my favorite swimsuits. My biggest problem is that I only wear 1, and that one is only 32. The one below is cute, but doesn't really fit like a bikini. I took measurements today, and the stores charge upwards of $12 per piece. Maybe I'
