The Anaheim Ducks have been turned into a trendy playoff pick in the Eastern Conference. The team is now +175 to make the playoffs out of the Eastern Conference over the next 14 days, according to BetOnline. The odds include the New York Rangers, Boston Bruins, Tampa Bay Lightning and Detroit Red Wings as teams that could be impacted by the Ducks. On Saturday night, just before the Ducks took on the Calgary Flames at Honda Center, the talk centered on the Ducks. The point spread for the game on Westgate Las Vegas SuperBook's sportsbook was +300 to win in regulation, -130 to win in a shootout. Among the most notable things about Saturday's game was the return of Ducks defenseman Cam Fowler, who came back from an offseason knee injury to play on the top pair with Hampus Lindholm. Fowler, who was limited to just 26 games last season because of a broken wrist, said he was sore after the game, but still felt good. "I was a little sore, but I'm good to go," Fowler said. "I just want to get back to where I was in the summer. I'm still working to get a little better." Anaheim wasn't the only team with a lot of chatter surrounding them Saturday. Los Angeles Kings star center Anze Kopitar won the 2017 Masterton Trophy, which honors the player who best exemplifies the qualities of perseverance, sportsmanship, and dedication to ice hockey. New York's Henrik Lundqvist, who is a finalist for the Vezina Trophy, won the 2017 James Norris Memorial Trophy as the league's top goaltender. Watch the full press conference below.
